Mad river is here turned into a race, about a mile above its mouth, and after being employed in mills, is turned into the Miami, partly above and partly below the village, thus constituting the ground on which it stands an island. In 1840 there were in and near the village four cotton factories, with five thousand spindles. There is a gun-barrel factory, with a capital of fifteen thousand dollars, a large iron foundry, four machine shops, Morgan and Muskingum Counties. factories, over one hundred thousand dollars. It contained a courthouse, and county offices of brick, and a jail and banking-house of stone. It had ten churches--two presbyterian, one episcopal, two baptist, two methodist, one Lutheran, one German reformed, one Roman catholic--two academies, eighty-two students, six schools, eight hundred and seventy-three scholars, over twelve hundred houses, fifty stores, and three printing-offices. The Miami canal passes through the place and connects it with Cincinnati. Population of the village, six thousand and sixty-seven; the township, in addition, four thousand two hundred and sixty-eight. The village now contains about eleven thousand. MORGAN COUNTY. Morgan is situated toward the southeast part of the state, and contains five hundred square miles. It was formed in 1818, and named in honor of General Daniel Morgan, the celebrated commander of a rifle corps in the revolution. The surface is generally uneven, and in many parts very hilly. Soil strong and fertile, being composed of a good deal of limestone-clay. Watered by Muskingum river and its branches, and by Duck creek, which afford fine water-power for manufacturing purposes. Wheat, corn,
