Excerpt from The Works of Alexander Pope, Vol. 7: Including Several Hundred Unpublished Letters and Other New Materials I send you the enclosed pamphlet by a private band, not daring to venture it by the common post; for it is a melancholy circumstance we are now in, that friends are afraid to carry on even a bare correspondence, much more to write news, or send papers of consequence (as I take the enclosed to be) that way. But I suppose I need make no apology for not sending it by post, for you must know, and own too, that my fears are by no means groundless. For, your friend Mr. Manley has been guilty of opening letters that were not directed to him, nor his wife, nor really to one of his acquaintance.
