General Nicholson, after winning a great victory at Sealcote (July 12th), had joined Wilson (August 8th), and the arrival of further reinforcements and a siege-train enabled them to open an effective fire on the 12th of September. On the 14th the assault was led by general Nicholson, who fell mortally wounded; the city walls were won; but the interior defences were not fully mastered till the 20th; and on the 21st general Wilson fixed his headquarters in the palace of the Great Mogul. The old king and his family had disappeared; but their discovery and capture was undertaken by lieutenant Hodson, a young officer known for his arbitrary temper, as well as for the daring and skill which had made the fame of the little force called Hodsons horse. If he got into the palaco of Delhi, he had written to a friend, the house of Timour will not be worth five minutes purchase, I ween; but general Wilson had insisted that the kings life should be spared. His retreat in the tomb of the emperor Humayun was betrayed by a spy to Ilodson, who, entering with only a fow troopers, ordered the host he found there to lay down their arms: his audacity secured obedience, and the king gave himself up as a prisoner. His son and grandson were captured next day by Hodson, who tried them on tho spot as rebels takon in arms, and shot them with his own hand. Hodsons death in action soon after prevented his being called to account for the deed, which cannot be excused. The old king was afterwards tried and transported to Rangoon. Simultaneously with the capture of Delhi, the movement for the relief of Lucknow was resumed. General Outram, on landing at Calcu...
