Not illustrated. 1809 Excerpt: ...A friend I got by lucky chance, Twas something like divine, An honest friend s a precious gift, And such a gift was mine; And now whatever might betide A happy man was I, In any strait I knew to whom I freely might apply j A strait soon came: ray friend I tryd; He heard, and spurnd my moan; I hyd me home, and tund my pipe To John o Badenyon. IV. Methought I should be wiser next And would a patriot turn, Began to doat on Johnny Wilket And cry up Parson Home. Their manly spirit I admird, And praisd their noble zeal, Who had with flaming tongue and pen Maintaind the public weal; But eer a month or two had past, I found myself betrayd, Twas self and party after all, For a the stir they made; At last I saw the factious knaves Insult the Tery throne, I oursd them a, and tund my pipe To John o Badenyon, V. What next to do I musd a while, Still hoping to succeed, I pitchd on books for company And gravely tryd to read: This song was composed when Wilkes, Home, &x. were making a noise about liberty. I bought and borrowed every where And studyd night and day, Nor mist what dean or doctor wrote That happend in my way: Philosophy I now esteemd The ornament of youth, And carefully through many a page I hunted after truth. A thousand various schemes I tryd, And yet was pleasd with none, I threw them by, and tund my pipe To John o Badenyon. VI. And now ye youngsters every where, That wish to make a show, Take heed in time, nor fondly hope For happiness below; What you may fancy pleasure here, Is but an empty name, And girls, and f riends, and books, and so. Youll find them all the same; Then be advised and warning take From such a man as me;

Im neither Pope nor Cardinal, Nor one of high degree;, Youll meet displeasure every where; Then d...
