Not illustrated. 1890 Excerpt: ...the Bard, as directed by Sir Leoline, hastes with his disciple; but in consequence of one of those inundations supposed to be common to this country, the spot only where the castle once stood is discovered--the edifice itself being washed away. He determines to return. Geraldine being acquainted with all that is passing, like the weird sisters in Macbeth, vanishes. Re-appearing, however, she awaits the return of the Bard, exciting in the meantime, by her wily arts, all the anger she could rouse in the Barons breast, as well as that jealousy of which he is described to have been susceptible. The old Bard and the youth at 1 Plan. We are quite of Wordsworths opinion. In 1800 Coleridge took up his abode at the Lakes. He wrote the second part of Christabel in 1800,--so, at least, he himself says,--and lays the scene of it at the Lakes. Was this part of the original plan? a Closed, Jc However, we have seen above that there were to be five cantos. length arrive, and therefore she can no longer personate the character of Geraldine, the daughter of Lord Roland de Vaux, but changes her appearance.To that of the accepted though absent lover of Christabel. Now ensues a courtship most distressing to Christabel, who feels, she knows not why, great disgust for her once favoured knight. This coldness is very painful to the Baron, who has no more conception than herself of the supernatural transformation. She at last yields to her fathers entreaties, and consents to approach the altar with this hated suitor. The real lover returning, enters at this moment, and produces the ring which she had once given him in sign of her betrothment. Thus defeated, the supernatural being Geraldine disappears.

As predicted, the castle bell tolls, the mothers voice is heard, and to the ex...
