

Rhymed Plea for Tolerance: In Two Dialogues, With a Prefatory Dialogue (Classic Reprint)

These verses the author does not venture to call them poetry will probably be referred to the class of satire. They contain, however, no names of living persons, (none at least for sneer or blame,) and no intended personal allusions whatsoever. They, who in satiric verses insist on such matter, will disapprove them accordingly. In proportion to his ability, the Author has been anxious to inculcate principles, and more especially that one of a full religious tolerance. And by this word he would not imply any mere toleration, either legal or practical; the one, too often cold, spiritless, a dead letter; the other, given or withheld at every private will.
