Excerpt: ... fwere from the Pope againe by twoe of his speciall letters delivered to him by Barker his servant lately, which enterprise was taken in hand at the perswasion of the Q; of Scotts, and labours of the B. of Rojse, as did appere by the writings found in the Duks house, and the confession of his Servants. T o this he answered, that although such practises was The Duks ai opened to him by these letters sent by the Q. of Scotts, and by the conference which he had with Rudolphi and his owne servants which was mediators in the cause; and that Banister brought him theife letters desiringe him to subscribe them, but he refused, and that he knew noe further of anie practise, but of ayd to be procured from the Princs to be sent into Scotland for defence of the Q. of Scotts subiects. He confessed alsoe, that he heard that Rudolphi had used his name to the Prines and these letters upon his behalfe, and that Barker brought himtwoe letters, which was sent from the Pope to him, but he never did conlent to anie thinge which might prejudice the Q of England or endanger her person, or inquiett the Realme. Yet they did accuse him for concealinge therof, that he would not reyeale the same to the Counsell. Here was I touched sharply alsoe, but moste of all in The B.ofi the next point, which was, That. An enterprizc That in time of the Parliament the B. o?Rfffe had sent Parliament. a message to the Duke by Barker, that he was enformed there was a great number of Earles, Lords and Barons, which was then assembled at the Parliament, that was offended with certain extreme lawes, that was to be made against these, whoe professed the catholique religion; for the which cause they would be glad that the Parliament were stayed and
