

The Field Bazaar

The Field Bazaar by Arthur Conan Doyle not included in books 1-8 of the Holmes canon. These include The Field Bazaar, The Adventure of the Mazarin Stone, and The Problem of Thor Bridge. This short story was written during an Edinburgh University fundraising event. Doyle had been requested by his university to contribute a short piece of literature for a charity magazine. In the story Watson has received a similar request and whilst he reads the letter at breakfast, Holmes correctly deduces the sender of the letter and Watsons thoughts with regard to the letter. It shares many similarities to the canonical stories. Aside from the metafictional twist in which Watson supplants Doyle as the author publishing his own stories in a magazine, it also plays not only about the famous skill of Holmes observations producing apparently miraculous results, but also upon the notion of the traditional breakfast scenes which open many Holmes short stories.
