

The History of Italy, Vol. 5: Translated From the Italian of Francesco Guicciardini (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from The History of Italy, Vol. 5: Translated From the Italian of Francesco Guicciardini He could not however intirely discover the Depth of the Popes Intentions, but fortifying himself with vain Hopes against the Difficulties that were preparing to surround him, he persuaded himself that the Pontiff had taken this Step from a Jealousy he had conceived of his Union with C?sar; and that by temporising with him, and giving him no Cause for greater Apprehensions, he would content himself with the Absolution, and proceed no further. But Julius, confirming himself more and more every Day in his Resolutions, granted Liberty, in contradiction to the repeated Remonstrances of the Ambassadors of the Allies, to the Fendatories and Subjects of the Church to list in the Service of the Venetians.
