

Mcdowell and Tyler, in the Campaign of Bull Run (Classic Reprint)

General Daniel Tyler contains an account by him of the Bull Run campaign of 1861. This account does great wrong to the commanding General in that campaign. The volume is edited by the distinguished author Donald G. Mitchell. The title page says that two hundred copies of this volume have been privately printed by Tuttle, Morehouse and Taylor, New Haven. It is stated in the preface that the volume opens with a fragment of autobiography written at the instance of his esteemed friend General George W. Cummins, who proposed preparing from it his biography for the West Point Alumni Association. This fact will explain its comparative reticence with respect to his private life, and its fullness in military and engineering details. It is believed that he had fully intended its completion, but the cares of business and the infirmities of age unfortunately forbade.
